

A new feature has been added to the Palama Settlement Music School program, according to an announcement by Miss Dorothy Chun, director of the Music School.

Beginning the second week of October, Palama Settlement Music School will be offering several opportunities for adults of the community and parents of music school students to enjoy music.

First of all, "Music for the Community" classes will be given each Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m., at which music will be presented in such a way that any one may learn and enjoy music. There will be singing, playing of different instruments and listening to music of all types. Miss Dorothy Chun will conduct the sessions.

A Pop Record session will be given one evening a week, day to be announced later. At this session, records of all types will be played upon request. There will be no formal lecturing; however, informal discussions will be conducted whenever there is the desire on the part of the group to do so.
